2023 Passage #2A – Fiction (Questions 9-12, 17-20)

Good Enough

- 1 Joey trudged out to his car, opened the door, and slammed it behind him in frustration. Sitting at the steering wheel, he replayed the entire fiasco from the afternoon's basketball scrimmage in his mind. He envisioned the ball bouncing off the rim and landing in the hands of his opponent instead of smoothly falling through the net—a critical misstep that set in motion a blizzard of scoring by the other side that started with a three-point shot, followed by two more quick baskets.
- 2 Joey buckled his seat belt and mulled over the remarks his team captain had made after scrimmage. Although Austin had not called out Joey specifically, he had insinuated that players lacking focus and unwilling to "go the extra mile" would be replaced on game day. Austin's comments stung. Joey realized he had made several blunders; however, that didn't mean he wasn't trying. In fact, he had willingly put in hours of additional practice each night at home in his driveway. For some reason though, he kept making careless mistakes.
- 3 What really bothered Joey was that he had disappointed Austin. Joey sighed in exasperation. He knew he had a strong work ethic; unfortunately, that no longer seemed good enough. Austin's warning reverberated in his ears and made Joey question whether he deserved his position on the team.
- 4 As Joey started the car, he saw the sticky note on the dashboard—it was from his mom. "Don't forget: crackers for the chili tonight, cat food, bananas, and ice cream."
- 5 His thoughts continued to ricochet around his mind like a pinball while he drove to the store. He scarcely registered his arrival as he remembered his failed attempts at guarding his teammates. He unthinkingly dropped a bunch of bananas in his cart, unconcerned about whether they would be bruised by the time he got home.
- 6 Making his way through the aisles, he was still replaying his subpar performance as he located the crackers for the chili. By the time he got to the freezer section, Joey had settled into a moroseness that even a half-gallon of mint-fudge couldn't melt. He had just plucked the ice cream tub from the freezer shelf, wondering how he could ever compete with guys like Austin, when a voice interrupted his self-recriminating thoughts.
- 7 "Excuse me, young man, but would you mind getting that tub of ice cream for me?" An elderly man stood to Joey's right, blinking up through a pair of thick-lensed glasses and pointing toward the top shelf. His strong voice belied the web of wrinkles that covered his face.
- 8 Caught off guard by the old man's request, Joey asked, "Which flavor?"
- 9 "Butter brickle, please, if you can reach it," replied the man. He looked relieved that Joey was willing to play the role of benefactor.
- 10 Joey handed down a half-gallon tub, and the man gingerly set it in his cart. "Thank you. It's a good thing I found someone so tall, or I would have had to settle for pistachio," he said. His nose crinkling in mock disgust, the old man chuckled as though this were the joke of the century. Then he adjusted his cap before heading off toward the next aisle.
- 11 While Joey watched him go, his phone buzzed with a text from his teammate Clayton, who tried to reassure Joey that Austin would never seriously consider benching him. Joey sent an appreciative response, but his gloom quickly descended again. He looked at the cart: bananas, crackers, and ice cream. He just needed to locate a bag of cat food, and then he could go home and put this miserable day behind him.
- 12 Joey pushed his cart quickly to the pet food aisle. There, halfway down on the right, he spied the old man again, wrestling with a hefty bag of cat litter on the bottom shelf.
- 13 "Well if it isn't my young friend, not only tall but hopefully strong. Any chance you're coming to my rescue again?" The warmth of the man's smile relaxed Joey's shoulders a little.
- 14 Joey effortlessly lifted the cumbersome bag. "So you have a cat?" he asked.
- 15 "No. This is less expensive than buying sand for my grandkids' sandbox," the man explained, patting the bag. At the shocked look on Joey's face, the man laughed again. "I'm just teasing. I have a cat named Whiskers—a big ball of feline trouble."
- 16 "My cat's called Zeus, because he's the supreme ruler and boss at our house," said Joey as he put cat food in his own cart.
- 17 "That's what they all think," said the man, laughing again. Throughout their entire interaction, this man had appeared pleased with the world.
- 18 Joey was uncertain why, but he took out his phone and texted his mom to tell her he was delayed and would be home shortly. After pocketing his phone, he turned back to the man. "Do you mind if I finish up shopping with you? I need to cool down since I just finished basketball practice and should stretch my legs."
- 19 "You stretch them anymore and you'll hit the ceiling! But if there isn't somewhere else you have to be," said the man, smiling genuinely, "I'm enjoying your company."
- 20 "Me too, and I'm not in a rush," Joey replied. Something compelled him to spend a bit more time with this genial stranger.
- 21 They wandered the aisles together, chatting about this and that, and by the time they finished, Joey had lifted three bags of cat litter and gotten about a dozen items off the high shelves. What's more, he had completely forgotten about basketball practice. Joey helped the man load his items into the car and closed the hatch. The old man and the teen regarded each other for a moment, and then they shook hands.
- 22 "Good talking to you, Joey; I'm Lloyd," said the man. "Thanks for the help today. I appreciate it. You made it a lot easier on me and much more enjoyable than usual."
- 23 "You're welcome, Lloyd. Do you usually do your shopping on Thursdays?" Joey asked.
- 24 "Same time every week since I'm a predictable creature of habit," Lloyd responded with a grin.
- 25 "I'm almost always here on Thursdays, too," said Joey. "I hope we run into each other again. You think I helped you; however, you helped me too. Chatting with you sweetened what started out as a pathetically sour mood. Hope to see you next Thursday."

Verse

Woke up to an epiphany of who I've become:
The embodiment of my experiences,
coupled with temperance emanated into this song.

I know right where I belong.

- 5 Tucked underneath my skin is the perfect blend: Grace, wisdom & certainty. My affirmations match my expectations. My whole body is an anthem. My heartbeat keeps the drum. It's so amazing!

Verse

2

- 10 Feeling lush virtuosity. It's amazing, the blend of fabric
woven meticulously.

I see the good in me.

- 15 Natural beauty internally, it flows through fluidly like fine linens of self-love. Esteeming my heart in high regard looking above fault lines. No more earthquakes of criticism & critique.
20 Won't weigh myself against others.

I am
unique.

Keeping the City of Venice Afloat

© Dima Andrei Lucian/Shutterstock.com

1 Instead of car-filled streets, the city of Venice in Italy has a system of winding canals. Tourists flock to Venice to float through the city on its iconic gondolas. People gather for conversation and coffee in café-filled squares reached by hundreds of pedestrian bridges that cross the canals. Ornate fourteenth- and fifteenth-century palaces filled with treasures of art line the waterways. The city is among the world's most beautiful.

2 Sometimes called the Floating City, Venice is designated a World Heritage Site by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, better known as UNESCO. As described by UNESCO, Venice "is an extraordinary architectural masterpiece in which even the smallest building contains works by some of the world's greatest artists." But today, this treasured city faces a challenge to its very existence—a challenge that scientists and engineers are determined to meet head-on.

From Marsh to Masterpiece

3 The history of Venice is intertwined with its geography. After the collapse of the Roman Empire in the fifth century, invaders surged into what is now northern Italy. Locals on the mainland needed to escape. Just off the shore of the Italian peninsula was a saltwater marsh dotted with 118 small islands separated by twisting, shallow channels. The islands had long been used by fishermen but were inhospitable and mostly uninhabited. The locals fled to these islands while waves of invaders burned and looted the cities on the mainland.

4 Although many of the refugees eventually returned to the mainland, some people remained on the islands. A lagoon and narrow strip of sand separated the marsh from the ocean and offered protection from the sea, as well as access to it. The early Venetians drained parts of the marsh and turned the channels into canals. Because the weak silt and sand of the islands would not support large buildings, the Venetians created foundations embedded not in the silt but in the stronger clay beneath. Using logs shipped from forests of nearby Montenegro, they created stakes as long as 60 feet. Then they pounded these stakes through the silt into the stiff, solid clay.

5 Their method of pounding was similar in principle to modern pile drivers. Using pulleys, the builders hoisted a heavy weight into position above the stake, or post, and then let it drop. Foot by foot, the stake was pounded into place. Once all the stakes were in place, wooden platforms were built on top. Buildings, many made of marble, were constructed on the platforms.

6 How many wooden stakes hold Venice up? They are countless! For example, when just one building—the Santa Maria Della Salute church—was built in the 1600s, over a million wooden stakes were reportedly used in its foundation.

7 Venice's natural strategic position on the sea, along with its special design, helped make it a wealthy city. It became a center for trade, with a flourishing merchant shipbuilding industry. Numerous stately palaces and magnificent churches were built atop the city's unusual foundation.

8 By the fourteenth century, Venice was a marvel of architecture and a magnet for Renaissance artists. Trade, traffic, and culture flowed along an intricate network of canals. The centerpiece was the S-shaped Grand Canal, which served, as it still does, as Venice's main "boulevard." What had once been a lowly marsh had become a masterpiece of urban development and an example of how humans can depend on, benefit from, and modify the natural environment at the same time.

Then and Now

9 Though Venice is no longer the world power of trade and wealth it was five centuries ago, its fantastic architecture and wooden foundations remain marvelously intact. Why hasn't the wood rotted after all these years? First, microorganisms that rot wood can survive only in the presence of both air and water. The posts, buried in sediment, are not exposed to air. Second, over the years, tides have carried silt and sand that have permeated the wooden pilings, turning them into something akin to stone.

10 Those ancient pilings still provide firm support for Venice's beautiful buildings, which in turn support Venice's tourist industry. The city remains a vibrant maze of at least 150 canals, more than 400 bridges, and somewhere beneath it all, 118 islands.

11 Even so, Venice's natural-turned-urban setting has special challenges. Starting in about the 1920s, people drilled wells under Venice for drinking water. To do that, they tapped into freshwater aquifers beneath the hard clay. As water was pumped out, the clay began to settle. So did parts of Venice. This settling caused the lower parts of the city to sink and flood. In the 1960s, drilling and pumping were halted to prevent any further settling.

12 Today, Venice faces a second flooding challenge. The same lagoon that protects the city now frequently floods it because of the rising sea level. When tides rise high, people must pick their way on raised platforms across Venice's famous St. Mark's Square, a particularly low area of the city.

13 To combat the tidal rise, engineers have created a system they call MOSE to keep the city above water. After decades of design and planning, they installed floodgates on the seafloor at the four entrances to Venice's lagoon. When high tides are predicted, the gates hinge up, blocking the tide. In October 2020, MOSE successfully protected Venice from high tides for the first time. Seventy-eight bright yellow barriers rose to keep the water out. The city's mayor, Luigi Brugnaro, told reporters, "Today, everything is dry. We stopped the sea."

MOSE System in Venice, Italy

© Fabio/Shutterstock.com

14 Once again, we can look to Venice to learn how humans can balance technology, nature, and urban landscapes. Thanks to MOSE, Venice is staying dry. With its rich history, amazing architecture, and priceless art, the city of gondolas and canals will be enjoyed by many future generations.

E1.4(F) make inferences and use evidence to support understanding	Analysis of Assessed Standards
2023 – Q7 Passage #1 Based on the article, what can the reader infer about Venice’s geography? Ⓐ Tidal effects have remained relatively constant over the history of the city. 2023 – Q8 Passage #1

Which of these is the best summary of the article?

A

Venice is a beautiful city with famous artwork on display almost everywhere. This includes the Santa Maria Della Salute church and numerous other buildings, especially the palaces that were built by wealthy inhabitants when the city was at its height. Today, it is a popular destination for tourists, who come from all over the world to see its canals and sit at the cafés.

Venice is a beautiful city with unique geography. Built on a network of islands, it has at least 150 canals. Early inhabitants constructed buildings atop wooden stakes, including grand palaces and marble churches during the Renaissance. These stakes lasted hundreds of years because of chemical transformations under the water. Nevertheless, the city still floods regularly.

C

Venice is a World Heritage Site, celebrated for its architecture. Located on 118 islands, the city is organized around waterways or canals. The islands had weak silt and sand that would not support large buildings, so stakes had to be pounded down to reach solid clay for building to begin.

D

Venice is sometimes called the Floating City. Instead of streets, it has more than a hundred canals. The buildings, many from the Renaissance, are supported on wooden stakes driven deep into the clay below the surface. In order to preserve this historic city from flooding, engineers over time have developed creative solutions, a process that continues to this day.

Read this quotation from paragraph 5.

Their method of pounding was similar in principle to modern pile drivers. Using pulleys, the builders hoisted a heavy weight into position above the stake, or post, and then let it drop. Foot by foot, the stake was pounded into place.

The author includes this information most likely in order to —

Ⓐ contradict the assumption that early inhabitants of Venice were unskilled

Ⓑ illustrate the unique building method in a way people today can understand

Ⓒ explain the importance of the wooden stakes in building a secure foundation

2023 Passage #3 – Informational (Questions 21-30)

Back in Time: The National Road

by Rickie Longfellow

1 The National Road, in many places known as Route 40, was built between 1811 and 1834 to reach the western settlements. It was the first federally funded road in U.S. history. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson believed that a trans-Appalachian road was necessary for unifying the young country. In 1806 Congress authorized construction of the road and President Jefferson signed the act establishing the National Road. It would connect Cumberland, Maryland, to the Ohio River.

2 In 1811 the first contract was awarded and the first 10 miles of road built. By 1818 the road was completed to Wheeling, and mail coaches began using the road. By the 1830s the federal government conveyed part of the road's responsibility to the states through which it runs. Tollgates and tollhouses were then built by the states, with the federal government taking responsibility for road repairs.

3 As work on the road progressed, a settlement pattern developed that is still visible. Original towns and villages are found along the National Road, many barely touched by the passing of time. The road, also called the Cumberland Road, National Pike, and other names, became Main Street in these early settlements, earning the nickname "The Main Street of America." The height of the National Road's popularity came in 1825 when it was celebrated in song, story, painting, and poetry. During the 1840s popularity soared again. Travelers and drivers, westward bound, crowded the inns and taverns along the route. Huge Conestoga wagons hauled produce from frontier farms to the East Coast, returning with staples such as coffee and sugar for the western settlements. Thousands moved west in covered wagons, and stagecoaches traveled the road, keeping to regular schedules.

4 In the 1870s, however, the railroads came, and some of the excitement faded. In 1912 the road became part of the National Old Trails Road, and its popularity returned in the 1920s with the automobile. Federal aid became available for improvements in the road to accommodate the automobile. In 1926 the road became part of US 40 as a coast-to-coast highway. As the interstate system grew throughout America, interest in the National Road again waned. However, now when we want to have a relaxing journey with some history thrown in, we again travel the National Road. Cameras capture old buildings, bridges, and old stone mile markers. Old brick schoolhouses from early years sporadically dot the countryside, and some are found in the small towns on the National Road. Many are still used, some are converted to a private residence, and others stand abandoned.

5 Historic stone bridges on the National Road have their own stories to tell as well as reminding us of the craftsmanship of early engineers. The S Bridge, so named because of its design, stands 4 miles east of Old Washington, Ohio. Built in 1828 as part of the National Road, it is a single arch stone structure. This one of four in the state is deteriorated and is now used for only pedestrian traffic. However, the owners of the bridge are attempting to obtain funding for its restoration. The stone Casselman River Bridge still stands east of Grantsville, Maryland. A product of the early 19th-century federal government improvements program along the National Road, the Casselman River Bridge was constructed from 1813 to 1814. Its 80-foot span, the largest of its type in America, connected Cumberland to the Ohio River. In 1933 a new steel bridge joined the banks of the Casselman River. The old stone bridge, partially restored by the State of Maryland in the 1950s, is now the center of Casselman River Bridge State Park.

6 Mile markers have been used in Europe for more than 2,000 years, and our European ancestors continued that tradition here in America. These markers tell travelers how far they are from their destination and were an important icon in early National Road travel. As children we saw them and asked our parents what they were. As adults we nostalgically seek them out for photographing. A drive through National Road towns usually reveals one of these markers, such as the one standing by the historic Red Brick Tavern in Lafayette, Ohio.

7 In the 1960s Interstate 70, leaving many businesses by the wayside, bypassed Route 40 and much of the National Road. The emphasis was on faster cars and quicker arrival time. We scurry along at a hurried pace today, but when we want to relax, take our time, and see some sights, we once again travel the National Road. The timeless little villages in quiet hamlets and valleys beckon us to small restaurants for a home-cooked meal and a trip back in time to when the pace of life was slower and less stressful.

Woke up to an epiphany of who I've become:
The embodiment of my experiences,
coupled with temperance emanated into this song.

I know right where I belong.

- 5 Tucked underneath my skin is the perfect
blend: Grace, wisdom & certainty. My affirmations match my expectations. My whole body is an anthem. My heartbeat keeps the drum. It's so amazing!

Verse2

- 10 Feeling lush virtuosity. It's amazing, the blend of fabric
woven meticulously.

I see the good in
me.

- 15 Natural beauty internally, it flows
through fluidly like fine linens of self-love. Esteeming my heart in high regard looking above fault lines. No more earthquakes of criticism & critique.
20 Won't weigh myself against others.

I am
unique.

Good Enough

- 1 Joey trudged out to his car, opened the door, and slammed it behind him in frustration. Sitting at the steering wheel, he replayed the entire fiasco from the afternoon's basketball scrimmage in his mind. He envisioned the ball bouncing off the rim and landing in the hands of his opponent instead of smoothly falling through the net—a critical misstep that set in motion a blizzard of scoring by the other side that started with a three-point shot, followed by two more quick baskets.
- 2 Joey buckled his seat belt and mulled over the remarks his team captain had made after scrimmage. Although Austin had not called out Joey specifically, he had insinuated that players lacking focus and unwilling to "go the extra mile" would be replaced on game day. Austin's comments stung. Joey realized he had made several blunders; however, that didn't mean he wasn't trying. In fact, he had willingly put in hours of additional practice each night at home in his driveway. For some reason though, he kept making careless mistakes.
- 3 What really bothered Joey was that he had disappointed Austin. Joey sighed in exasperation. He knew he had a strong work ethic; unfortunately, that no longer seemed good enough. Austin's warning reverberated in his ears and made Joey question whether he deserved his position on the team.
- 4 As Joey started the car, he saw the sticky note on the dashboard—it was from his mom. "Don't forget: crackers for the chili tonight, cat food, bananas, and ice cream."
- 5 His thoughts continued to ricochet around his mind like a pinball while he drove to the store. He scarcely registered his arrival as he remembered his failed attempts at guarding his teammates. He unthinkingly dropped a bunch of bananas in his cart, unconcerned about whether they would be bruised by the time he got home.
- 6 Making his way through the aisles, he was still replaying his subpar performance as he located the crackers for the chili. By the time he got to the freezer section, Joey had settled into a moroseness that even a half-gallon of mint-fudge couldn't melt. He had just plucked the ice cream tub from the freezer shelf, wondering how he could ever compete with guys like Austin, when a voice interrupted his self-recriminating thoughts.
- 7 "Excuse me, young man, but would you mind getting that tub of ice cream for me?" An elderly man stood to Joey's right, blinking up through a pair of thick-lensed glasses and pointing toward the top shelf. His strong voice belied the web of wrinkles that covered his face.
- 8 Caught off guard by the old man's request, Joey asked, "Which flavor?"
- 9 "Butter brickle, please, if you can reach it," replied the man. He looked relieved that Joey was willing to play the role of benefactor.
- 10 Joey handed down a half-gallon tub, and the man gingerly set it in his cart. "Thank you. It's a good thing I found someone so tall, or I would have had to settle for pistachio," he said. His nose crinkling in mock disgust, the old man chuckled as though this were the joke of the century. Then he adjusted his cap before heading off toward the next aisle.
- 11 While Joey watched him go, his phone buzzed with a text from his teammate Clayton, who tried to reassure Joey that Austin would never seriously consider benching him. Joey sent an appreciative response, but his gloom quickly descended again. He looked at the cart: bananas, crackers, and ice cream. He just needed to locate a bag of cat food, and then he could go home and put this miserable day behind him.
- 12 Joey pushed his cart quickly to the pet food aisle. There, halfway down on the right, he spied the old man again, wrestling with a hefty bag of cat litter on the bottom shelf.
- 13 "Well if it isn't my young friend, not only tall but hopefully strong. Any chance you're coming to my rescue again?" The warmth of the man's smile relaxed Joey's shoulders a little.
- 14 Joey effortlessly lifted the cumbersome bag. "So you have a cat?" he asked.
- 15 "No. This is less expensive than buying sand for my grandkids' sandbox," the man explained, patting the bag. At the shocked look on Joey's face, the man laughed again. "I'm just teasing. I have a cat named Whiskers—a big ball of feline trouble."
- 16 "My cat's called Zeus, because he's the supreme ruler and boss at our house," said Joey as he put cat food in his own cart.
- 17 "That's what they all think," said the man, laughing again. Throughout their entire interaction, this man had appeared pleased with the world.
- 18 Joey was uncertain why, but he took out his phone and texted his mom to tell her he was delayed and would be home shortly. After pocketing his phone, he turned back to the man. "Do you mind if I finish up shopping with you? I need to cool down since I just finished basketball practice and should stretch my legs."
- 19 "You stretch them anymore and you'll hit the ceiling! But if there isn't somewhere else you have to be," said the man, smiling genuinely, "I'm enjoying your company."
- 20 "Me too, and I'm not in a rush," Joey replied. Something compelled him to spend a bit more time with this genial stranger.
- 21 They wandered the aisles together, chatting about this and that, and by the time they finished, Joey had lifted three bags of cat litter and gotten about a dozen items off the high shelves. What's more, he had completely forgotten about basketball practice. Joey helped the man load his items into the car and closed the hatch. The old man and the teen regarded each other for a moment, and then they shook hands.
- 22 "Good talking to you, Joey; I'm Lloyd," said the man. "Thanks for the help today. I appreciate it. You made it a lot easier on me and much more enjoyable than usual."
- 23 "You're welcome, Lloyd. Do you usually do your shopping on Thursdays?" Joey asked.
- 24 "Same time every week since I'm a predictable creature of habit," Lloyd responded with a grin.
- 25 "I'm almost always here on Thursdays, too," said Joey. "I hope we run into each other again. You think I helped you; however, you helped me too. Chatting with you sweetened what started out as a pathetically sour mood. Hope to see you next Thursday."

Simply Me

by Andrea "Vocab" Sanderson

Verse

Woke up to an epiphany of who I've become:
The embodiment of my experiences,
coupled with temperance emanated into this song.

I know right where I belong.

- 5 Tucked underneath my skin is the perfect
blend: Grace, wisdom & certainty. My affirmations match my expectations. My whole body is an anthem. My heartbeat keeps the drum. It's so amazing!

Verse

- 10 Feeling lush virtuosity. It's amazing, the blend of fabric
woven meticulously.

I see the good in
me.

- 15 Natural beauty internally, it flows
through fluidly like fine linens of self-love. Esteeming my heart in high regard looking above fault lines. No more earthquakes of criticism & critique.
20 Won't weigh myself against others.

I am
unique.

2023 Passage #3 – Informational (Questions 21-30)

Back in Time: The National Road

by Rickie Longfellow

1 The National Road, in many places known as Route 40, was built between 1811 and 1834 to reach the western settlements. It was the first federally funded road in U.S. history. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson believed that a trans-Appalachian road was necessary for unifying the young country. In 1806 Congress authorized construction of the road and President Jefferson signed the act establishing the National Road. It would connect Cumberland, Maryland, to the Ohio River.

2 In 1811 the first contract was awarded and the first 10 miles of road built. By 1818 the road was completed to Wheeling, and mail coaches began using the road. By the 1830s the federal government conveyed part of the road's responsibility to the states through which it runs. Tollgates and tollhouses were then built by the states, with the federal government taking responsibility for road repairs.

3 As work on the road progressed, a settlement pattern developed that is still visible. Original towns and villages are found along the National Road, many barely touched by the passing of time. The road, also called the Cumberland Road, National Pike, and other names, became Main Street in these early settlements, earning the nickname "The Main Street of America." The height of the National Road's popularity came in 1825 when it was celebrated in song, story, painting, and poetry. During the 1840s popularity soared again. Travelers and drivers, westward bound, crowded the inns and taverns along the route. Huge Conestoga wagons hauled produce from frontier farms to the East Coast, returning with staples such as coffee and sugar for the western settlements. Thousands moved west in covered wagons, and stagecoaches traveled the road, keeping to regular schedules.

4 In the 1870s, however, the railroads came, and some of the excitement faded. In 1912 the road became part of the National Old Trails Road, and its popularity returned in the 1920s with the automobile. Federal aid became available for improvements in the road to accommodate the automobile. In 1926 the road became part of US 40 as a coast-to-coast highway. As the interstate system grew throughout America, interest in the National Road again waned. However, now when we want to have a relaxing journey with some history thrown in, we again travel the National Road. Cameras capture old buildings, bridges, and old stone mile markers. Old brick schoolhouses from early years sporadically dot the countryside, and some are found in the small towns on the National Road. Many are still used, some are converted to a private residence, and others stand abandoned.

5 Historic stone bridges on the National Road have their own stories to tell as well as reminding us of the craftsmanship of early engineers. The S Bridge, so named because of its design, stands 4 miles east of Old Washington, Ohio. Built in 1828 as part of the National Road, it is a single arch stone structure. This one of four in the state is deteriorated and is now used for only pedestrian traffic. However, the owners of the bridge are attempting to obtain funding for its restoration. The stone Casselman River Bridge still stands east of Grantsville, Maryland. A product of the early 19th-century federal government improvements program along the National Road, the Casselman River Bridge was constructed from 1813 to 1814. Its 80-foot span, the largest of its type in America, connected Cumberland to the Ohio River. In 1933 a new steel bridge joined the banks of the Casselman River. The old stone bridge, partially restored by the State of Maryland in the 1950s, is now the center of Casselman River Bridge State Park.

6 Mile markers have been used in Europe for more than 2,000 years, and our European ancestors continued that tradition here in America. These markers tell travelers how far they are from their destination and were an important icon in early National Road travel. As children we saw them and asked our parents what they were. As adults we nostalgically seek them out for photographing. A drive through National Road towns usually reveals one of these markers, such as the one standing by the historic Red Brick Tavern in Lafayette, Ohio.

7 In the 1960s Interstate 70, leaving many businesses by the wayside, bypassed Route 40 and much of the National Road. The emphasis was on faster cars and quicker arrival time. We scurry along at a hurried pace today, but when we want to relax, take our time, and see some sights, we once again travel the National Road. The timeless little villages in quiet hamlets and valleys beckon us to small restaurants for a home-cooked meal and a trip back in time to when the pace of life was slower and less stressful.

2023 Passage #4 – Revision (Questions 31-36)

Layla wrote this story about a boy who had to babysit his younger cousin. Read Layla's paper and look for revisions she needs to make. Then answer the questions that follow.

Babysitting Pedro

(1) Julian groaned. (2) He had just sat down at his desk to think of topics for his English essay when he heard his mother calling him.

(3) "I'm in my room," he answered, seriously hoping that the impending conversation would be brief and straightforward. (4) His mom appeared in his doorway and said, "I'm so glad I found you, Son."

(5) "Oh, me too," Julian responded teasingly, his face buried in his hands. (6) Then he quickly apologized. (7) He didn't want his mother to have the opportunity to scold him for a disrespectful attitude.

(8) "Now, Julian, I know you have schoolwork, but your aunt really needs a babysitter for Pedro tonight—"

(9) "I can't," Julian interrupted. (10) "Aunt Linda is just going to have to find someone else—"

(11) Now it was his mother's turn to interrupt, and her tone was serious. (12) "Listen, Julian," she began. (13) Julian sat back and waited for what he knew was coming. (14) The recurrent lecture was burned into his memory from previous occasions when his mother had reminded him that family members help one another. (15) Sure enough, later that evening he found himself supervising his precocious two-year-old cousin, whose unruly behavior was only surpassed by his shocking knack for nonstop conversation, or "jibber-jabber," as Julian called it.

(16) Julian stood over his aunt's stove, staring at the side of a box and had a struggle to decipher the precise order of operations required to make macaroni and cheese. (17) "Juju school!" Pedro screamed excitedly as he jumped in bouncy circles around Julian's legs, occasionally grabbing Julian's jeans with his tiny, chubby hands to keep from toppling over.

(18) "What school, Pedro?" Julian replied absentmindedly.

(19) Pedro replied in a stream of jibber-jabber that contained the words "toys," "brother," and "buses." (20) Though not fluent in toddler speak, Pedro was detailing for Julian his latest trip with his mom to pick up his older siblings from school.

(21) Julian was so focused on preparing a meal for Pedro that he failed to notice his rambunctious young cousin had disappeared.

(22) His mother and Aunt Linda would surely frown upon his losing the toddler, so Julian ran from the kitchen into the dining room.

(23) "Pedro!" he called out anxiously but didn't get an answer.

(24) He flew from the dining room to Pedro's bedroom and found nothing. (25) As he retraced his steps down the hallway and into the living room, he heard muffled laughter coming from Pedro's room.

(26) He drew closer to the sound and distinctly heard more giggling, along with "I hide from Juju." (27) Clearly, Pedro was playing his favorite game, hide-and-seek. (28) Julian laughed in spite of himself, though he felt more relieved than amused. (29) He had not lost his little cousin, after all.

(30) After a half hour of playing Pedro's version of hide-and-seek, where the toddler repeatedly hid under his own bed for Julian to discover him, the little boy made an announcement. (31) "Juju, I hungry," he said.

(32) Julian suddenly remembered the noodles boiling on the stove and raced to the kitchen to turn off the burner. (33) The noodles were severely overcooked, but he mixed in the cheese, milk, and butter anyway. (34) To his surprise, the dish didn't taste that bad. (35) The consistency reminded him of a lumpy, cheesy mashed potato dish, and Pedro seemed to love it. (36) "Juju cook good!" he exclaimed delightedly, flinging a cheesy noodle across the room.

(37) An hour later when his mother called, Julian was wiping noodles and wiping cheese sauce off of Pedro, off himself, off the wall, and off the floor. (38) "Julian, how's it going with Pedro?" his mother asked.

(39) "Mom, let's just say that I finally have a topic for my English essay. (40) I'm going to write about overcoming challenges."

(41) His mother laughed. (42) "Let me guess. (43) 'Babysitting Pedro' will be your title."

(44) "I think so," Julian said.

2023 Passage #5 – Revision (Questions 37-42)

Veronica wrote this essay for her English class after researching a way technology is improving the world. Read her essay and look for any revisions she needs to make. When you finish reading, answer the questions that follow.

Powering Up to Solve a Problem

(1) People all around the world have cell phones nowadays. (2) Wherever you go, everyone has a cell phone. (3) What happens when the cell phone dies? (4) You recharge it, of course. (5) But that task isn't so simple when only 18 out of 100 citizens in your country have electricity. (6) That is the case in several countries across Africa, meaning residents cannot use their cell phones very often. (7) But one man has devised a clever solution that may power up a continent of cell phone users.

(8) Henri Nyakarundi grew up in Burundi, but a civil war caused his family to relocate for their safety. (9) Upon arriving in the U.S., Nyakarundi studied computer science at Georgia State University, and at just 19 he founded his first business, a trucking company.

(10) Nyakarundi always knew that he wanted to be an entrepreneur. (11) Something that not only solves practical problems but could have a positive social impact was what he wanted to do. (12) "I'm not a job type of guy. (13) I think it's my personality; I've always liked to make my own decisions," Nyakarundi laughed.

(14) Then Nyakarundi decided to do something different. (15) Intrigued by innovative technology, he started African Renewable Energy Distributor (ARED). (16) Nyakarundi wanted to come up with something unique, fulfilling, and impactful. (17) In 2009, Nyakarundi devised a solar-powered mobile kiosk. (18) His goal was to develop a business that catered specifically to the African market. (19) The solar-powered kiosk could charge up to 80 phones or other small devices.

(20) After hiring an engineer and a designer to develop the prototype, Nyakarundi found that 80% of his company's budget went to research and development. (21) The expense of developing a new technology surprised Nyakarundi, but he continued onward with his idea. (22) Nyakarundi started with an initial design and then made adjustments based on the market. (23) Four years later, Nyakarundi's vision had grown, and he felt ready to implement his plan.

(24) The business model is one that is good for him, franchise owners, and the people of Africa. (25) Nyakarundi says he looks for people who lack opportunities to become franchise owners.

(26) From that initial investment, the company says existing owners are making between $38 and $107 a month, which is enough to pay rent and feed a family.

(27) Some owners are women or people with disabilities. (28) "They are the most vulnerable group in Africa, especially in business," said Nyakarundi. (29) Without equal access to funding, women and people with disabilities typically find fewer opportunities in the African business world. (30) Likewise, Nyakarundi would like to create a small fund to help people who show entrepreneurial skills but cannot afford to buy into ARED's franchise business. (31) He believes there is a lot of untapped talent that just needs a little boost.

(32) Nyakarundi has modified his vision based on the kiosk's success. (33) He plans to develop ARED from just a franchise kiosk to a technology-based business. (34) Because a lot of people have smartphones but can't afford internet, Nyakarundi envisions building his own content network on the ARED kiosk. (35) These new models will bring Wi-Fi and internet to rural communities. (36) Nyakarundi's ability to look toward the future has enabled him to grow a profitable business, but his heart for his community is truly powering up the world to be a better place.

2023 Passage #6 – Editing (Questions 43-47)

In his science class, Raheem is learning about repurposing products. He wrote this paper to tell about a unique way some subway cars are being repurposed. Read Raheem's paper and look for corrections he needs to make. Then answer the questions that follow.

Fish Making Their Home in a Submerged Subway Car

New Passengers for Old Subway Cars

(1) In an average year, more than a billion people rely on the New York City subway system. (2) About 6,500 subway cars combine to make up one of the nation's most efficient train systems. (3) As technology has evolved, many of these subway cars have been replaced. (4) So what does the city of New York do with the old subway cars? (5) In the past some were sold to be preserved or reused, however, most subway cars were scrapped for their metal. (6) Eventually, the New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority came up with a better idea. (7) In 2001 it began dropping old subway cars into the Atlantic Ocean to serve as artificial reefs.

(8) Naturally occurring reefs, or coral reefs, are ridges that are just below the surface of the ocean. (9) They form gradually and create a diverse ecosystem providing shelter and food for a vast array of marine life. (10) The fish that live in and around coral reefs have great commercial value and significantly benefit local economies.

(11) At one time the ocean floor along the Atlantic coast had been full of cracks and spaces in which fish could hide. (12) Over the years, however, sand built up, which made the ocean floor flat and unable to support its once thriving ecosystem. (13) By dropping subway cars into the ocean, New York officials hoped to create ideal conditions in which new ecosystems could thrive. (14) The cars would serve as surfaces for invertebrates to grow on and shelters for fish and other aquatic life.

(15) Before they could be used as reefs, the subway cars had to be thoroughly cleaned. (16) Parts like seats and wheels were removed and sold or recycled. (17) Any materials that could possibly decompose and pollute the water were also removed. (18) When the subway cars were ready, they were loaded onto barges and carried out to sea to be dropped in various locations off the Atlantic coast. (19) In total more than 2,500 retired cars have now been dropped into the ocean to be used as artificial reefs.

(20) Today the subway cars are crawling with life. (21) Coral and barnacles that could never grow on the sandy ocean floor is spread across the hard walls of the subway cars. (22) Different species of fish, such as tuna and flounder, now call the subway cars home. (23) In the areas where the cars were dropped, there is 400 times more food than there was before. (24) Local businesses are benefiting from the fishing opportunities, which in turn helped the overall economy. (25) The project has been deemed a success, and those involved look forward to new underwater passengers using the cars for many years to come.

2023 Passage #7 – Editing (Questions 48-52)

Ming-Ha has written this essay about a memorable experience she had with her grandmother. Read Ming-Ha's essay and look for any corrections that she needs to make. When you finish reading, answer the questions that follow.

Learning the Value of Storytelling

(1) Parents, grandparents, and teachers often say the same thing to teenagers "Are you listening to me?" (2) In schools, workplaces, and homes, people are taught the importance of listening. (3) Even though we often want to follow our own ideas, listening to a teacher, boss, or a family member is actually very important for teenagers. (4) I found this out firsthand! (5) Some teenagers may roll their eyes at the idea of listening to a grandparent's life story, but I learned more about my family than I ever imagined during an interview I had with my grandmother for the National Day of Listening. (6) Since I had never heard of the National Day of Listening, I decided to do some research.

(7) The National Day of Listening is a day dedicated to sitting down with someone and taking the time to actively listen to his or her story. (8) It was started by a nonprofit organization named StoryCorps. (9) The group's mission is to bring people together to share and preserve its stories. (10) For the National Day of Listening, I chose to interview my grandmother because my father said she is "the toughest and smartest woman" that he knows. (11) Although my grandmother knows just about everything about me, I realized as I was preparing to interview her that I did not know any details about her earlier life. (12) I had no idea that my grandmother was such an inspiring person.

(13) It was difficult to imagine my grandmother being young and determined. (14) For as long as I can remember, my grandmother has always looked and behaved the same: short, slightly hunched, with curly white hair, and a quiet demeanor. (15) During the interview in her living room, she pulled out a photo album and found a faded photograph of her children piled on the same couch when they were young—all nine of them. (16) I had always been impressed that I had so many aunts and uncles I realize now how hard my grandmother worked so everyone could have a comfortable life. (17) As a young mother, she cared for her children and the neighborhood children in order to make extra money. (18) At night she baked the breads and buns she had learned how to make when she was a little girl helping her parents in their Bakery in China. (19) She sold her baked goods to earn additional money to support her family. (20) When her children were older, she went to school to become a nurse. (21) She worked long hours while also taking care of all her children, and eventually she cared for her grandchildren. (22) As I listened to her tell the story of her life, I realized how correct my father was when he called her tough and smart.

(23) After listening to her stories, I realized that I am very fortunate to have such a loving, dedicated grandmother. (24) Without paying attention to my grandmother's stories, I wouldn't know how much she sacrificed to take care of everyone in her life, including me. (25) The National Day of Listening helped me not only to be a better listener but also to understand the kindest member of my family. (26) Now when they ask me if I am listening, I say, "Absolutely!" (27) The interview helped me to see the influential people right in front of me.
